

4. P. N. H. Brahhu holds the view that Casteism can receive a jolt only when new attitudes in the people are developed. The cinema and other media can do much towards the creation of these attitudes.

5. The political parties and organisations thriving on Casteism should be banned. Similarly journals and magazines fanning Casteism should be brought under the clutches of law.

6. Voluntary organisations should be formed in quite large numbers. They should work with missionary zeal and play an influential role towards the removal of Casteism.

7. There should be limited use of the word 'caste'. Limited use of the word 'caste' will bring in its wake the disappearance of the distinctions based on caste. Consequently the feeling of Casteism will die a natural death.

8. Last but not least, public opinion and propaganda should be relentlessly directed against Casteism through press, radio, television and educational institutions in order that the feeling of untouchability finds no place in the minds of the people.

9. In fine, strong political will on the part of the leaders, courage on the part of the social reformers and above all an attitudinal change on the part of the members of various castes towards the evils of the caste system will go a long way in eradicating Casteism from the Indian social setting.
